I think that regardless of what we end up doing, continuing care will be important, and I enjoy learning about continuing care

Patients, families and other colleagues in this field are pleasant and enjoyable. Before I was hesitant about working in long term care since I wasn't sure if patients would be able to improve, or would more deteriorate. Now I know the goal for many patients is improvement

I am considering it as I think it could be rewarding
Yes, I did previously as I had experience in placement in a long term care facility
I have previous experience in continuing care and would like to practice in this area in the future
My interests are continuing care
My view on working in continuing care has not changed
Because I like working with older adult/geriatric population. I look forward to working on an interdisciplinary team
I really enjoy working with the elderly and especially with complex patients. There is a lot of opportunity for a pharmacist to benefit this care sector.
I found I am more interested in caring for patients with tangible results and fast outcomes.
I need to explore other specialties first. Also, we did not interact with any real patients this semester which is essential for my decision of what area I want to go into.
At the moment I am really uncertain about what I want to do. My interests are very business oriented and I am not sure if continuing care can provide.
Not sure how specific you meant the above questions because I want to be a family physician who will deal a lot with continuing care but not solely continuing care.
I appreciate continuing care, but I think my interests just lie elsewhere
It is too early in my career to make such plans
I have developed less of an interest due to the depressing nature of the work
Does not appeal to me
It is not my area of interest, although I did learn about it during the term
Other interests, perhaps further on in my career I would consider this as an option
I want to work in a more fast-paced setting
I want to experience all other areas of medical health before I make my decision
Although continuing care can be fast paced in its own sort of way I am hoping to be involved in a different field of nursing
This is not my passion. Although who knows? Maybe I will change my mind!
I might consider it in the future but I am more interested in the acute care sector
I am not committed to any career path yet but this class has given me a lot of information on continuing care that I will certainly keep in mind for the future – it has gained my interest more than before

It isn't very fast paced. Nothing done in this class has made a good pitch for CC besides the alcohol harm reduction
This is not an area of nursing that I'm passionate about. I prefer the pediatric aspect of nursing.
No, not my area of interest!
I don't think it is for me, but I am not closing my doors
It is not something that interests me at this point in time.
I had clinical experience in a continuing care site so I already knew it wasn't for me. I want fast paced days that can change any second. Continuing care was fun but it just isn't what I'm meant to do Since I am only in my first year, I would like to explore my options.
I like kids
Just hoping to get in another area
I think I may start my career in continuing care and then go into clinical or community nutrition – depends where I get hired.
Being a first year student I've only begun to scrape the surface of what options I have for my clinical career. I can't say with certainty what I would be best suited for but continuing care is definitely an option
I had a clinical placement in nursing here in LTC and liked it. IntD had no bearing on this decision.
I don't know. I want to experience other areas before making a decision
Undecided
I had a practicum at a long term care centre and I really enjoyed this class, so continuing care is an area of interest (which never was before, I had no idea I would like it so much)
I am more open to take a role in continuing care. I increased my knowledge about the role of OT in those facilities and I am interested in working there
I am keeping my options open. This area is very interesting for me, especially with a fast aging population
